

GE's Advanced Sensors Business acquired by Amphenol Corporation

St. Mary's; PA USA - 19th December 2013 We are excited to announce that Amphenol Corporation has completed the acquisition of the Advanced Sensors business from GE. The acquisition of The Advanced Sensors business, including the entire product portfolio (Thermometrics, NovaSensor, Telaire, Kaye, and Protimeter), will operate as part of Amphenol Corporation under the name of Amphenol Advanced Sensors.

Amphenol Advanced Sensors is a leading global manufacturer of highly engineered sensors and sensor-based systems for the automotive, heavy equipment, healthcare, pharmaceutical, biotechnical and other industrial markets.

Amphenol Advanced Sensors, which is headquartered in St. Mary's, Pennsylvania with additional operations in the Americas, Europe and Asia, has approximately 1,600 employees worldwide.

"The Advanced Sensors business is a great fit with Amphenol Corporation" says Pete Straub, General Manager of Amphenol Advanced Sensors, "Amphenol is committed to growing our business organically and through additional strategic acquisitions. We are confident that this approach will provide more opportunities for our valued customer, as we continue to develop products and services that enable their business to innovate and meet future market needs.

The electronics revolution is driving significant growth opportunities in both interconnect products and sensors, both as discrete solutions and, increasingly, as value-add systems. The addition of Amphenol Advanced Sensors to Amphenol creates a new growth platform with outstanding potential, as the combined offering of sensors and interconnect products will create significant new opportunities for accelerated profitable growth across a wide variety of our end markets.
